WHY CALL A SPECIAL SESSION?

An examination of the subjects that the governor, in his letter to members of the legislature, proposes to submit to that body, discloses no matter calling for immediate action. On the contrary, practically all of these matters have been placed before legislative assemblies of the state in the past, a number of them having been brought to the attention of the present legislature at its regular session. The question of usury has had the attention of the lawmakers of the state at every session of the legislature for the past four years. Bills of varying degrees of merit have been introduced and debated. Acts designed to place the brand of the criminal upon the usurer have been seriously considered. The net result to the people has been a waste of time and money, leaving the needy borrower to make the best terms possible with the man or institution with money to lend.

The matter of establishing a twine factory was specifically called to the attention of the fourth legislature, and was again impressed upon the present legislature. That the governor favors installing an oil mill at the Granite reformatory was well known to every member of the legislature long before that body adjourned. With this knowledge, they deliberately turned away from the suggestion. Isn't it a little strange that so many of the members of the legislature now express not only a willingness but an impatient desire to be called together to do things they could so easily have done while in regular session? Surely it was their sworn duty to give to the people they represent all needed laws. Having confessed to failure they should not be surprised that the taxpayers protest against further waste of money in a special session. What assurance have the people that a change of opinion has come to members of the legislature on these subjects? Do visions of six dollars per day for an indefinite period through the dull winter months appeal with more force to these lawmakers than the arguments of the governor? Evidently there is no sort of justification for a special session to consider these matters that have already met with disfavor at the hands of the legislature.

But there is another reason put forth at this psychological time as a new and extraordinary reason for convoking the legislature in special session. It is urged that our election laws need immediate attention. That the recent decision of the supreme court of the United States invalidating our state constitution which eliminated the illiterate negro voter, makes it necessary for us to divorce our state and local elections from federal elections. Could this not have been done just as successfully while the legislature was in regular session? To say the best of it, the proposition is one of doubtful efficacy in dealing with the subject in hand. Why urge it as something new when it is worn with age? People who have kept themselves informed with the march of public events will not be deceived by this clamor of patriots who want to yield service of doubtful value—at six dollars per day. It will be recalled that early in the fall of 1911, when a tremendous effort was made to induce the governor to call a special session, a meeting of the democratic state central committee was held in the assembly room of the Lee-Huckins hotel, at which time resolutions were passed, which, after reciting the fact that "two of our state election officers have been unjustly convicted and sentenced to a federal prison," ended in this fashion:

"Whereas, under such a condition the state and federal elections should be held on different days,

"Be It Resolved, that such an emergency we believe demands the calling of the legislature in extra session, that the rights of the state and of the virtuous and intelligent citizens may be preserved."

History records that no special session was called at that time. It likewise records that since the resolution was passed there have been two regular and one special session of the legislature without any apparent effort to correct this imperfection in our election laws. An examination of the records will also disclose that the present governor was an active participant in that meeting and advocated the adoption of the resolution above set forth. It is readily seen that this is no recently discovered defect in our election laws. It is likewise plain that it does not offer an extraordinary reason for calling the legislature in session.

The Ardmoreite does not want to be misunderstood. It believes that most of the things that the governor mentions in his letter are matters, if favorably acted upon by the legislature, that would be a benefit to the people, but it contends that any and all of these matters could have been acted upon at the regular session, and that the legislature, having had an opportunity to act upon these questions and failed to do so, it is unfair to the great body of taxpayers to put them to the expense of a special session. We take no stock in the declaration made by some of the legislators, that the session would end in thirty days. The people have had experience in this direction, and will not be easily deceived. It will be remembered that when a special session of the fourth legislature seemed inevitable, a committee of the leaders from the two houses conferred with the governor and assured him that the session, if called, would not last longer than twenty days, and that it could be held at a nominal cost to the taxpayers. The session actually lasted more than seventy days, and cost the people more than a hundred thousand dollars.

To sum up: There is no unusual condition that demands a special session of the legislature. The provision of the constitution giving to the governor authority to call a special session was intended to be strictly construed and it assumes that the governor will not exercise that authority, except upon extraordinary occasions. We are firmly convinced that no such occasion exists, and that to call a special session under existing conditions would be a violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of the constitution—a constitution the governor has taken a very binding oath to "support, obey and defend."

Got Hold of the Wrong Tooth

The dentists of Ardmore and Carter county held a convention in this city one day the past week for the purpose of discussing matters pertaining to the profession. Among other things up for consideration was a new anesthetic, discovered by a local practitioner to take the place of any of the older ones in use, and guaranteed to relieve all pain in extractions. While the subject was under discussion, a burly son of Ham approached the office and wanted a molar extracted at once, as it was causing him considerable pain.

The assembled doctors, thinking it a good time to try the new discovery out, invited him to a seat in the operating chair and proceeded to put their theories into practice.

The anesthetic was administered by the discoverer, and one of the visiting dentists invited to perform the operation.

Securing the necessary implement he proceeded to excavate for the tooth and amid great lamentations from the patient drew it forth after much labor. The anesthetic was apparently "laying down on the job," and was coming in for its proper meed of criticism when it was discovered that the operator had extracted the wrong tooth. They pulled the right one for the patient after they had convinced him that it was all a mistake, but he never has realized the joke.

Nod Their Thanks

Horses which are brought to my shop for their shoes nod their heads with thankfulness as they walk out. Their feet feel so good they want to express their gratitude.

I can see from my shop door on Broadway that Ardmore is a new town. Fine buildings are going up everywhere and Broadway and North Washington are as busy as Main street used to be. It seems good to see the old town coming out and doing big things.
